

Today we will touch on the topic of the adjectives with -ic and -ical suffixes. There are lots of them but here, we are going to review the most important and frequently used ones.

We'll begin with the word historic. We can use it when we speak of some significant events. We use historical when something is a part of history. This could be some facts, historical events or people.

This is a historical moment for our country, which means this is a significant moment for a country, he was a great historical figure which means he is a part of history.

The next words is classic and classical. We use classical speaking of the period in history art and music. Keep an eye on the word classic. This word has three means. This is either high-quality item or something difficult or even a classic literary work. She was wearing a classic dark-blue skirt. In this case classic means typical. Tolstoy's War and Peace is a classic.

Electric is a device that is powered by electricity or produces electricity. For example it can be a train or a kettle. As for an electrical it is very close work to the electric. By the way, there is such a color in English electric blue.

Magic is something that is actually magic like fairy, magical means that something is funny.
